

Symbolic group in bronze

PUBLIC-SPIRITED business concerns in Johannesburg are constantly enriching with visual art the new buildings which are rapidly taking over this skyscraper city.

One of the latest examples of this trend is to be found in the banking hall of the new United Building Society's premises in Eloff Street.

Here is to be found the massive bronze which has for its theme "If one person can survive so may millions, provided they club together instead of clubbing each other" as Herman Wald, the well known South African sculptor described it.

Today we publish a picture of this enormous symbolic group and one may admire the fashion in which the artist has portrayed the strength of such unity.

It is very much in keeping with the modern mood to portray the power of this Machine Age rather than the beauty which may still be found in the world in which we live.
